"An immensely valuable and detailed analysis of foreign, mainly American, assistance to Latin American higher education, To Export Progress provides an understanding of the 'what' and the 'why' of foreign aid to a key sector. This book will be a classic in its field." Philip G. Altbach, Monan Professor of Higher Education, Boston College "Professor Daniel C. Levy, a leading authority in the field of higher education and the nonprofit sector in Latin America, once again has opened an otherwise neglected field through his carefully researched and reported study of philanthropic support for university reform in the region. Drawing on a wealth of archival material, documentary evidence, interviews, and first hand experience with the actors and agencies involved, To Export Progress illuminates the vision and ideals inspiring international agencies, as much as the realities they confronted in deciding on grants and loans policy, from the 1960s to the 1980s. The book is strongly recommended for scholars and students of international education, for Latin American experts, and for philanthropic managers and educational administrators in the developing world." Jorge Balan, Senior Program Officer for Higher Education, The Ford Foundation. In this study of the attempts to export the modern Western university, its ideas, and its form to the Third World, Daniel C. Levy examines the development assistance provided by the Ford Foundation, the U.S. Agency for International Development, and the Inter-American Development Bank and their relations with local partners in Latin America in the 1960s and 1970s. Levy considers the funders, how they selected partners, which countries and institutions were favored, and to what effect. Based on meticulous research and careful analysis, the book provides a detailed look at philanthropic assistance to the region during the era of modernization and development in Latin America.

"This book by Daniel Levy represents a necessary and original contribution to the field of international higher education. Scholars who are interested in Latin American higher education and in the study of international organizations sponsoring development initiatives in these countries will benefit significantly from reading this volume." Alma Maldonado-Maldonado, University of Arizona, REVIEW OF HIGHER EDUCATION, Vol. 31.1 Fall 2007 (Alma Maldonado-Maldonado, University of Arizona REVIEW OF HIGHER EDUCATION 2007-01-00) "... Levys book renews our awareness of the continuing presence and historical effect of U.S.-exported models upon our own institutions and our university traditions and identities." Imanol Ordorika, Universidad Nacional Autnoma de Mxico, ACADEME Online, Jan.-Feb. 2007 (Imanol Ordorika, Universidad Nacional Autnoma de Mxico ACADEME Online 2007-01-00) "It... offer[s] a useful comparison of the goals and results of foreign assistance to universities in the region. In an era of political turmoil, economic ups and downs, and the rapid massification of higher education, it shows that genuine or lasting reform would have required a far more comprehensive web of initiatives (and far more aid) than 'ideal typical' donors could provide." Adam R. Nelson, University of Wisconsin-Madison, History of Education Quarterly online, Vol.49.1 Feb. 2009 (Adam R. Nelson, University of Wisconsin-Madison History of Education Quarterly online 2009-01-00) "Due to the breadth of its scope, the book has several potential targets: scholars of international and comparative education, Latin American historians, higher education researchers, and those interested in the difficult relationship between donors and recipients in Latin America. Yet of all the contributions this book makes, the reserved yet optimistic conclusion that assistance in Latin America actually led to progress may be the most important. Those working in the trenches of development work take note: what youre doing matters, and Daniel Levy has the evidence to prove it." THOMAS F. LUSCHEI, Florida State University, Comparative Education, Vol 50. No4. November 2006 (THOMAS F. LUSCHEI, Florida State University Comparative Education 2006-01-00) About the Author Daniel C. Levy is Distinguished Professor of Educational Administration and Policy Studies at the State University of New York at Albany. His book Building the Third Sector won the 1997 ARNOVA prize for best book.
